Building Regulations are in a Terrible State, but I Have a Solution

Lorcan Sirr
Technological University Dublin, lorcan.sirr@dit.ie

Follow this and additional works at: https://arrow.dit.ie/beschrecmed
Part of the Urban, Community and Regional Planning Commons, and the Urban Studies and Planning Commons

Recommended Citation
Sirr, L. (2016) Building regulations are in a terrible state, but I have a solution. Sunday Times 03.04.2016.
Springing back into action with brisk sales

LINDA DAILY MARKET WATCH

Sharing accommodation can soften the pain of soaring rents and expand your social circle, but beware the house where, says Eithne Dunne

P ersons have a host of emotions that come into play around the time they are looking for a new house. It is a common term of reference to describe the period when one is looking for a new house, and it is often associated with the act of buying or renting a new home. However, it is important to understand that there are many factors that can influence your decision to move, such as personal circumstances, financial considerations, and lifestyle changes. It is crucial to carefully evaluate your options and make informed decisions when looking for a new home. Ideally, you should try to find a place that fits your lifestyle and needs, and that you can comfortably manage within your budget. In this way, you can avoid the stress and financial burden of managing a home. When you find a home that you love, be sure to thoroughly research the neighborhood and the property to ensure it is a good investment. You should also consider the long-term implications of your decision, such as the potential for future appreciation and the ability to maintain the property. With careful planning and consideration, you can successfully navigate the home-buying process, and enjoy the many benefits of owning your own home.