The recent damning internal report of the Central Bank has given renewed impetus to the proposed Irish Brexit and the European Union’s efforts to control migration from the Republic. It is feared that the report may signal “the first major step in the right direction for the Irish economy.”

The report highlights the importance of immigration for the country’s economic growth and the need for significant reforms to improve the management of economic flows. It also notes that the country’s housing market is facing significant challenges, with a potential for a significant increase in demand from overseas buyers.

The report also highlights the need for greater transparency and accountability in the housing market, with particular attention to the potential for foreign buyers to influence the market. It is feared that the report may signal “the first major step in the right direction for the Irish economy.”
