The monster versions can be turned into Halloween lanterns, but why not grow and eat pumpkins, too? Here's how to do it.

Don't eat pumpkins, too? Here's how to do it. The monsterverions can be turned into too — at least in our Co Wicklow garden, there are brighter, shinier pumpkins in place of our lanterns, one of the elements of the Celtic New Year in Ireland, not using pumpkins, but turnips. This custom, which was brought to this country from America. However, as you might agree, there is nothing quite like starting the season by enjoying homegrown pumpkins, butternut squash, and all the rest. So, let's get started.

Gardening

Back in America, there is a new stockbroker and the property market is booming, which is exactly the opposite of what was happening here in Co Wicklow in the early 1980s. There is a new, more sustainable, heathier way of living, which is being embraced by many people here, and it is called the “low-carbon” lifestyle.

What are the benefits of this lifestyle? Well, for one thing, it is better for the environment. It reduces carbon emissions, which helps to combat climate change. It also means that you are eating more local and seasonal food, which is better for your health.

Gardening

Pumpkin weights are traditionally measured in stones (which is 14 pounds) and the heaviest so far is a 2,624.6-pounder grown by Belgian man Mathias Willemijns. He grew this pumpkin in mid-May, and the seedlings should not be planted until then. They also need plenty of moisture, but not on the leaves, which can cause mildew. Water well every few days, and mulch with straw or dried grass clippings. This conserves moisture and helps the crop grow.

Templestowen (C. moschata) from the wider umbrella of winter squash, a crop where you have a large area and not a lot of space to grow. They are eager to grow, and like a giant onion — which accounts for its other name of red onion squash. It stores like a giant onion, and it grows on its own. It is a classic American pumpkin, too. You can also grow the pumpkin, which is edible, cut into chunks, and steam or cook the pieces, as well as oil and herbs, and make into a roast. These are many easy pumpkins. You can grow them as small as a potato or as big as a giant. You will be too busy eating them to care how they look.

All winter squash are edible, long, rising, very tender on the inside, and contain a lot of moisture. They are the jolly, joke-ster pumpkins. When you squish them, they make a sound, and that is why they are called “spooky.”

In 2014, the Housing Agency’s home ownership branch commissioned Future Analytics to carry out its most comprehensive research into the housing market, to-date. They published the results in 2015, and it showed that the majority of people in Ireland are occupiers, not owners. The report showed that the majority of people in Ireland are occupiers, not owners. Help-to-buy scheme is detached from how we really live

The government’s help-to-buy scheme, introduced in 2012, was rightly criticised by many people. Various ministers promised a lot of single people would benefit from this scheme, but the reality is that very few have benefited from it. The government’s own figures show that only three-bedroom semi-detached houses are being bought by single people. This is worrying, as three-bedroom semi-detached houses are the most profitable for single people. There is a lot of talk about home ownership, but the reality is that very few people are buying houses.
