Holohan, Michael. (b 27th March 1956). Composer. Holohan graduated from UNIVERSITY COLLEGE DUBLIN in 1978 and later pursued further studies at QUEEN’S UNIVERSITY BELFAST. In the eighties and nineties he attended masterclasses in France with Boulez, Messiaen, Xenakis, Berio and Lachenmann. He served as chairman of the ASSOCIATION OF IRISH COMPOSERS from 1987 to 1989 and was later appointed chairman of the Droichead Arts Centre in Drogheda. His music has received a number of national and international awards including the Celtic Music Prize at the Celtic Film and Radio Festival in Brittany in 2002. He was elected to AOSDÁNA in 1999. Influenced by his experiences of new music on the continent, Holohan’s early works are notable for their experimentalism with aspects of serialism, exotic scales and extended performance techniques. With his move to Drogheda in the mid-eighties however, the abstraction of his early music receded somewhat as he began to embrace the myths and landscape of the Boyne Valley as a source of inspiration. His style in works such as Cromwell (1994) and the Mass of Fire (1995) became more tonal although the presence of modernist surface features continued to remain an integral part of his music. From the mid-nineties onwards traditional Irish music began to feature in Holohan’s work and he has written a number of works for the uilleann pipes and Irish Bronze Age horns. A consistent theme throughout his career has also been his engagement with Irish and European literature as evinced by his considerable output and settings of poets such as SAMUEL BECKETT, SEAMUS HEANEY, Dermot Healy, Seán O’Riordáin, John F. Deane, Susan Connolly, Paul Durcan, Ivan Lalić and Tomas Tranströmer.
